

Forum on Toxins & Disability

The latest research on chemicals, toxins and their relationship to public health

Chemicals and toxins such as lead, mercury, BPA, PCBs, pesticides and neurotoxins in the environment may be contributing to the rapidly increasing numbers of children and adults with disabilities. What toxins are raising red flags in the scientific community? Is there consensus among scientists and policy analysts about the effect of toxins on public health?

Join us for a lively discussion and presentations by the country's leading experts on the relationship between exposure to toxins and disability, and what steps are recommended to address this issue.
